BMW RIDERS OF TOLEDO March 2003

Minutes for February 2003

Minutes for January were accepted as printed in newsletter.

Delbert called the meeting to order.

Presidents Report

Delbert brought meeting to order. Del welcomed everyone to meeting there was a pretty good turn out. Sunday the Ohio Ra had a breakfast meeting. There were several members from our club there. Bob Wood is the Ohio RA director. He is currently looking for a replacement because he has received a trustee position with the national RA. RA is making some changes but nothing drastic. The RA rally director is now a paid position that person gets paid a percentage of what the rally makes. The RA Rally is going to be at Birmingham Alabama. At the barber museum. The Ohio Ra campout is at Peebles Ohio June 13th-15th. Dinner is pre-paid. The next RA brunch is March 16th in Utica Ohio. Cleveland Micro rally is June 6th-8th at the pit. BMW North America looking for someone to open a dealership in Toledo. Pictures of the bricks we have purchased were passed around. Fast tracks class info passed around. That's all.

Vice-President

New vice-president is Michel Litalien nothing to report.

Secretary Report

Any comments. If we supply paper my work will supply ink. Newsletter is open to all articles. Moto equip sent us a thank you note. We still have patches to sell. Phone list is new contact me if there are any corrections to be made.

Treasurer Report

Sonja gave report. Report was accepted as printed. Gary of course gave a nay!

Road Captain

Gary there is an r90s rally down in Shreve 3rd weekend in September. Gary is going to RA rally. Maggie's banquet food was excellent.

Webmaster

Wade the photos were posted on website of banquet and of bricks purchased.

Old Business

The patch is $5.00 see Beth. Then we have the subject of name badges Ed Cook brought a sample. Nametags he found the guy that did our old name badges. He still can do it on the same nameplates. They have a gold background. The club voted to order 45 plates. If you want a name badge let Ed cook know what you want on it. Price will probably be $5.00. Ed is the badge master. There were plenty of laughs on what Gary's badge should say. Next order of business was to vote on spring campout. The club voted to keep it at Harrison Lake. Next year look at sites within a 70 miles radius of the middle of Toledo this was the miles voted on last year by club. If you have an idea for a place videotape or picture it. The requirement is electric hook up's because of potential weather. Banner needs to be checked into yet.

New Business

A ride to Hopewell where the bricks are was mentioned looking for a good date for club. The by-laws were looked at. There was extensive discussion. They word of mouth when several people joined the club was that you attended 3 meetings before they voted you in. That is not how the by-laws read so we are looking at by laws and current constitution. Current Constitution and By-Laws:

about America Online and pot and school shootings.

None seem to realize or care that we've just launched Columbus, Magellan, and the pyramids into space this morning off the Florida coast...

Imagine That

by Mark Nicholas

This the time of year that I break out the atlas. The book of dreams. Roads that I've never traveled, destinations yet foreseen. This is the time, after shoveling 150 feet of snow from the sidewalk and being mildly disabled for it for 3 days, that I repeat the question in my head, "what the hell are you doing here?". Along with, "your getting to old to shovel snow". I know it could be worse. Take of instance, in November 1913 'the white hurricane storm'. Winds from 60 to 95 mph swept the great lakes for 3 days taking more than 248 sailors and more than a dozen ships were lost. Waves of 30 feet high sweep the lake freighters, sealing them in a winter tomb ...forever. Yes, it could be worse, but it could be better. Bitter winter temperatures makes me toy with the idea of relocation. So, I start researching the towns I find in the atlas. Places like Gunlock Utah. Twenty miles from St. George Utah, so I'm not too far from the civilized world. Maybe 150 miles north east of Las Vegas. What is the housing market like there? How about the cost of living? I have a low threshold for happiness. I don't require much. A house trailer would be fine. Of course, I'd have to have a shed for the Beemer. I've lived in mobile beer cans before. Yes, I can see it. A Kermit chair and some plastic pink flamingos in the front yard. A beer cooler at my side, watching the sunset over the Mormon mountain range. Gunlock has 2 gas stations and 3 fast food restaurants. What more can a man want? Maybe the occasional 'dance' with the local waitress.

Women after child birth, (so I'm told) secrete a hormone that makes them forget the pain of child birth. The reason? If they forget the pain they continue to have more children, insuring procreation continues and mankind marches on. I see the summer riding season in Ohio much the same way. By June we are riding down the road smiling without a clue of the winter behind us or the winter yet to come. Lying in the sun at the campsite like a lizard on a rock I absorb the drug of summer that erases my memory of past winters pain.

There are thousands of towns below the freeze line. Thousands of roads yet traveled. Thousands of dreams. Its January. Its 3 degrees out tonight. I'm on the couch with a blanket and an atlas running my finger 40 miles south of Mobile Alabama down highway 188 to the redneck Rivera. To Bayou La Batre Alabama. Whispering, "imagine that"

2001 Daytona Trip

Doug Grosjean
Day 7
Shuttle launch

The sun is just coming up, the eastern sky is orange. There's some surf waves, and lots of seagulls looking for tourist scraps. I take a few shots To be sure that the digital camera can record the colors accurately in the Low light, and it does.

Then we wait.

We don't have to wait long, when somebody lets out a loud "Wooo-hooo!" and then we can see the shuttle, or more correctly, we can see a flame on the Ground, about 1" tall from our point of view but then again it is maybe 20 miles away. The flame gathers speed and goes higher and higher and higher into the sky in a big arc directly over our heads, the shuttle itself invisible at the head of the plume of flame.

I snap off some shots, various compositions. At first, the shuttle is a bright orange flame against a dull orange sky low on the horizon. But then as it climbs higher into the sky, the sky is blue and the sunlight reflecting off the hull of the shuttle and its boosters is just gorgeous - as one local put it, a silver bullet heading into space. Then as I watch and I shoot, the shuttle is directly over our heads. I see two dot's separate from the shuttle itself. I shoot one last shot, it's good, and a few seconds after that the shuttle goes invisible to my eyes and is safely in orbit. All of this takes just a few minutes, maybe 4-5 minutes total. Wow..... I've just seen an honest to goodness space ship! Holy crap..! We all wander back into the Hilton, all 6 of us. Sharon and I call my brother on the room phones, wondering if he took it in from a balcony. Nope, in a groggy voice we find out he was up late answering business email and overslept. Poor guy - it was a really good show.

Then Sharon and I grab breakfast at the Hilton, and I think about what I've just seen. A few people in the restaurant are talking about the launch for a few minutes, and then the subjects change to other current events. Space travel has become routine in my lifetime, though it's certainly not for everyone.

Like most things, on the surface the shuttle may not seem like much. A big, really big, firecracker that flies much higher and faster than the ones at a Fourth of July picnic. No big deal, take a look, take some photos, go in and have breakfast.

But go below the surface, and stand back in awe: an army of people around the world, including janitors, designers, engineers, scientists, physicists; working together to put the shuttle into space on a regular basis, generally on schedule and generally without mishap. And an even bigger picture - the shuttle flights are just baby steps, and space travel is our baby. This baby doesn't really do much, at least not yet. It's a toddler struggling to walk around the coffee table in the living room by itself at this point. But eventually...

Just as a proud dad can see a track star or a budding writer in a child just learning to walk or spell, I think space exploration is bound for grand and glorious things. We'll get better at it, over time, and fly higher and faster and farther. Our curiosity won't allow us to do otherwise.

And going way out on a limb here, but I think that maybe that's the way it should be. Reaching and exploring and learning. Space travel as our civilization's crowing achievement, as a challenging mental puzzle to be solved, our own modern-day pyramids requiring massive amounts of teamwork, money, and materials.

But there's more. Humor me for a minute here. Let's assume that the part in the Bible that says "God made man in his own image" is correct. Well, the main traits that seem to separate man from the animals are curiosity and much higher intellect than the animals. So it follows that if intellect and curiosity are God-inspired traits, that space travel itself might be an almost holy endeavor, with a gentle Creator watching Earth from above saying "Those are my children that just fired that rocket into space! Aren't they grand, for being so young and dumb and all?" It's a mental picture that makes me smile, anyway.

And one other angle on all of this....

People in the here and now really can't see what events in our time will be considered pivotal 200-400 years hence. I wonder just how many people saw Columbus or Magellan off on their voyages, or if the Pilgrims leaving England was newsworthy in it's day. And if the Pilgrims had an audience at the British docks, did they realize what they were seeing when the Mayflower sailed away? Did any of us on that Florida beach? Somehow, I doubt it. We're all rooted in the here and now, and it's probably impossible for any of us to have a real sense of continuity through the ages when technical changes are happening so fast.

The restaurant has just a few people in it now. What appears to be a grown father and son couple, an Asian couple with a 3 year old girl that's just cute as can be, flirting with her mom and dad and giggling. Another couple is talking
